Thousands Are Armed and Home Rule May Provoke Desperate Conflict.

in Ulster; because responsible men of affairs have set up a provisional government in anticipation of open reboilion, and because hundreds of thousands of men have sisned a solumn covernant that they will reast "Home Rille" to the bitter end.

Even if these embattled thousands should succeed in preventing the passage of "home rule," by any parlamentary trick or political coup, then is the danger of civil war over! Ask the Irish who have been promised with a thousand promises, redocmed only with contempt. They would promptly furnish the war un the other side. In truth, there are Irish National Volunters also under drill today.

Think War Possible but Improbable.

Think War Possible but Improbable.
On this showing it would seem that war is inevitable. And yet, the most ardent Unionist, breathing the most ferocious threats doesn't quite believe it will come to war. The reason is this:

in: In considering British politics the colden rule" is to take both sides of a controversy and dilute in 10 times a quantity of the spirit of compro-

Not that everybody will be pleased. Not that everybody will be pleased, by anybody, for that matter. Indeed, t has been said that the typical Britan compromise is arranged on the lasts of finding something that nobody is for so that everybody will be satisfied.

is for so that everybody will be satisfied.

Here again, things are not what they seem, for this time the Irish (the Nationalists on one side and the Ulater-litis on the other) are a part of the equation. The Irish character differs from the British in many ways, and one of them is that your Irishman pregors a fight to a compromise even when he isn't particularly interested. So, you see, it is a dreadful moddle.

But that isn't half. The real "scrap" to ver here han nothing to do with Ireland and Home Rule except in as incidental way. The real big fight is about a much more fundamental thing than whether Ireland shall have laws stamped "Made in Dublin" or whether it shall continue to import its statutes from Westminalet.

The Real Row.

the real row in Britain is between the aristocracy and the democracy. It is all about whether this government shall continue to be run and managed by the classes, or whether the masses shall take it over. The war is on here. It may be only a titunic political battle, in which hallots and not bullets will settle the thing, or it may take advantage of some superficial aspect of the real question, such as the disastfection in Elster, and blaze forth in lies and blood.

But of one thing you may be sure—
It is all deadly in its seriousness. There is none of the opera bouffs about it. It is not by any means a mere pupper show arranged by the politicians to been thouselves prominent in the mind's eve of the public. People may say wild and abourd things—things that provehe the calm stranger to mirth—but it is all in deadly carnest.

Buttle is a Century Old.

Battle Is a Century Old.

For more than a century field has sought a return to "Home Rule," the reestablishment of that Dublin parliament that was extinguished by frault and corruption at the beginning of the gineteenth century. For 40 years that strongle has been constantly pressed forward. Nearly 30 years ago, in 1886, Gladstone espoused the frish cause and brought in the first Home Rule bill. It split the Liberal party, for the time being wrecked Gladstone himself, and availed Ireland nothing. Twenty-one years ago, in 1885, Gladstone again in power, introduced and this time passed a "Home Rule" bill, only to see it buried in the house of lords—that splendid mausoleum of Liberal legic-lation.

splendid mausoleum of liberal legielation.
Came then 16 years of Conservative rule and another Liberal regime which undertook "Home Rule." but so very slowly. The house of lords was the lion in the path.
Finally, partly because of the stupidity of the Hon, a way was found to get around the house of lords. That opportunity was selved upon. That is why "Heme Rule" is again imminent, and why Britain trembles on the verge of internecine war.

ROSE AGAIN TELLS OF ROSENTHAL PLOT

"Bald Jack" Relates Substantially Same
Stury as at Fleat Becker Trial;
Policemen Also Testify.

New York, May 12—Thild Jack"
Rose, star witness in the first caso against Chas Becker concerning the murder of Herman Rosenthal, appeared in that role scain today. He took the stand shortly before noon and calmly told of the part he played in the events leading up to the gambler's death Substantially, it was the same story that he told at the first trial.

Briefly, Rose recited how Becker and Rosenthal had entered into partnership in a gambling establishment, how they quarreled, how exposure for Becker was emminent, and how Rosenthal's death was plotted.

Police surgeant William J. File testified Monday that he was in plain clothes in the hotel dining room when he saw "Briddie" Webber come in and go to Rosenthal's table. The latter went out. File then heard shots and danhed out in pursuit of the assessing.

Louis Krauz, formerly a waiter, told of being stopped at the corner of 45a estreet and Broadway by a man who told him if he wished to keep out of trouble he would move on. Kraus then saw four mes fire. He may Rosenthal's fall and watched the assessin climb in an automobile and be whiched away. Sullivan was smilling, sail Krauz. He said he had later seem the four guarnen who were executed has mount. They were the men whom he anw fire at Rosenthal.

Thought Rosenthal Dangarrous.

Thought Rosenthal Dangerous.
Rose carried the story of the rela-ons of Rosenthal and Becker a step irther and boll of the gambler's grow-us bitternous toward the former police licutenant.

After the arrest of "Big Jack" Zelig, Becker suid, according to Hose, "Rosenthal is setting very dancerous. Can't you do something with Zelig and these fellows to slimos Rosenthals" Zelig was a notorious guessan.
